Course Description

Various perspectives on the developmental process will be examined from the fields of theology, psychology, sociology, and marriage and family therapy. Attention is given to the growth of cognitive structures within various cultural contexts; psychosocial, moral, and faith development through the life span; issues surrounding the family life cycle; and models of transformation, both personal and systemic. The course encourages students to reflect on their own developmental experiences in light of their religious heritage as well as to explore the implications of course content for their ministries of pastoral care and counseling in a multicultural world.

Student Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, students will have the ability to

1. Recognize, critique, and utilize individual psycho-social and faith development theories as they inform clinical and pastoral case conceptualizations and interventions
 - a. Relates to AAMFT core competency 2.3.8: to demonstrate a preliminary ability to integrate these factors into clinical observations that relate to eliciting a relevant and accurate biopsychosocial-spiritual history to understand the context of the clients' problems and 2.3.10: to help identify clients' strengths, resilience, and resources.
